Contractor Topic Study

Specialist vs. Generalist Pros Purchase Behaviors in 2023

Are you a specialist or generalist? Do you know which one you are? Do you know how your customers view you? Are you aligned? Are you prepared to respond to the ever-changing needs of your customers? Are you ready to capitalize on the opportunities that specialization and generalization present? Let's find out!

Specialist Pro Past Facts

The majority of specialist firms are less than $500K in annual revenue and tend to have 1-10 employees. Specialists are more typically 11+ years in business and are more likely to have a project size of $10K+. Specialists are also more likely to be sole-of-the-firm. Generally speaking, most specialist firms are privately owned and operated by a single owner/principal who is between the ages of 35-54.

Percentages may not add to 100% due to rounding.

Specialist Pro Use of Subcontractors

89% Do Most of the Work Myself and Hire Few Subs

6% Use Subcontractors for Most of the Work

5% Act Primarily as a Subcontractor Manager

Specialist Project Involvement

68% Are Specialists Arranged by Volume Of Their Customers

65% Do Install Products Purchased by Homeowner

33% We Buy Products That We Then Install in Existing Home(s)

Specialist Category Purchase Incidence

Years in Trade

Specialists & Generalists

Generalist Pro Past Facts

The total annual revenue earned among generalist firms trends slightly higher than that among specialist firms and is more likely to be over $500K. Generalist firms are also more likely to have a project size of $10K+ and have been in business for 11-20 years (people with 11-20 employees, as well). Generalists tend to complete less than 50 projects annually and are more likely to be owned and operated by someone between the ages of 35-54, and more likely to be owned coming from larger projects.

Percentages may not add to 100% due to rounding.

Generalist Pro Use of Subcontractors

89% Do Most of the Work Myself and Hire Few Subs

6% Use Subcontractors for Most of the Work

5% Act Primarily as a Subcontractor Manager

Generalist Project Involvement

76% Are Generalists Arranged by Volume Of Their Customers

72% Do Install Products Purchased by Homeowner

38% We Buy Products That We Then Install in Existing Homes

Generalist Category Purchase Incidence

Where Do Loyalties Lie?

Nearly half of Pros research a work on materials and tools, which greatly impacts the fact that they should display the highest ownership loyalty and product loyalty.

Spent on Materials and Tools

Overall, 47% of contractors express being "extremely concerned" with switching brands and exhibit a higher willingness to switch suppliers, over switching brands, for a 30% discount.

If Preferred Brand was Unavailable at Supplier, Would You...

70% would find a different supplier while 30% would find a different brand.

Product quality and cost are the top reasons for both brand and supplier loyalty. Product availability is also important for brand loyalty while supplier loyalty relates to brand identity, loyalty programs, payment terms, and impact in the community are also important to a supplier's loyalty.

Retailers Considered

The top reason to try a new brand or supplier is reliability. Rewards programs rank near the bottom of the list. The minimum discount needed to try a new brand or supplier is about 30% and that is consistent for both groups.

Reasons for Other Retailers Being Considered

Minimum Discount Needed to Try a New Brand

30%

Channel Switching

The shopping experience is changing. Gone are the days of simply clients, and contractors. Now, they are customers, and they have more choices than ever before. Contractors, manufacturers, and retailers are all competing for customers' attention. Generalists are looking for retailers that can help them with their customers' needs and make the work as stress-free as possible. Specialists are looking for retailers that can help them with their customers' needs, but they're also looking for retailers that can help them with their own needs as a contractor. They want to be able to shop for their own needs as well as their customers' needs. Specialists are